THE MUTE MINSTREL.

The flakes fall white and fast and soft
In a noiseless whirl from the vault aloft,
And spread their mantle wide and fair
On earth's brown breast through the darkened air.

So soft the rose-bush looks and wan,
Mothlike her blossoms in all shades,
And leafless trees bend red and low
Beneath their branches' crown of snow.

A robin paused in his flight too long
In his frozen throat is a silent song;
And nevermore shall his dead heart beat
With its love of the noiseful and sweet.

Southward his winged mate he flew,
But this redbreast died at home alone,
Through the banded boughs you may dimly see
A bird of snow in a cedar-tree.

My life, dear bird, is the cedar-tree,
And my heart in its branches is dead like thee,
Tyrant as thy breast in its love and youth,
But the snow-flakes fell on its trust and truth!

To leafy carols in pomp of spring
Thy merry carols may mock the late,
But thine and mine shall be chilled and mute!

The Hand of Fate.

After Wilford Dumont married Annie Lee in a fit of pique and jealousy, Ellen Harland, once his betrothed wife, suffered more than words can tell.

She had loved him in his wild passionate way, and had never thought she could lose him; but she had trusted too much in her own power, and another woman was the wife of the young millionaire.

She nearly went mad with rage and pride and wounded passion, but she had sense enough to hide her heart from envious eyes. As long as she felt that in Wilford's presence she would turn pale, as long as she could not bear his voice or glance without wincing, she kept out of his way, under pretence of visiting an aunt at a distance; but in the sprightly letters that she wrote her friends, she spoke of being glad that Wilford Dumont had not felt her dismissal of him to severely to be comforted.

And when she was once mistress of herself she called upon the bride, and Mrs. Dumont, who knew nothing of the old love story welcomed her heartily, and told Wilford, on his return home, that she was delighted with his old friend Miss Harland.

"She cannot have cared for me," thought Wilford Dumont, with a pang no husband should have felt at such a thought, but the little wife never guessed it and it did not harm her. She returned the young lady's call and an intimacy began at once. So that, when the Dumonts went to their place on the Hudson for the summer season, Annie sent a warm invitation to Miss Harland.

Ellen thought it over. It was an offer not to be despised by a fashionable girl with a small income.

She desired to marry, and hotels at watering-places were expensive. All the men of her set would be at Wilford Dumont's at one time or another. The neighboring residents were people of position. She could dress and flirt to her heart's content, and Wilford could see what a prize he had lost, even while she gave him pleasure to understand that she was glad she had escaped the matrimonial yoke. And then she wrote a loving note to Annie, and held an interview with her dressmaker.

And Wilford Dumont—well he had loved this girl, and had married Annie because she had made him angry. And Annie was so sweet and mild and gentle. And now he was waiting for her coming with a guilty feeling in his heart. He wanted to see her, to sit by her, to hear her sing. As her host, he could do this, at least. He went to the depot to drive her home. Annie had, of course, expected him to do that, but she had not expected what followed; for when they were in the little wagonette side by side, and she turned and looked into his eyes, Wilford Dumont had kissed the girl. It was night, and though the moon was bright, the shady lanes which led to Dumont Park were still and lonely. No human eyes looked down upon them, and their lips had met so often—oh, so often!—before.

But Ellen drew back and flushed scarlet, and said:

"You forget you are a married man, sir."

And Wilford answered:

"Yes, I did forget. Pardon me."

That and nothing more. Then there was silence, each of those two suffered in a different way, and yet somehow there was a pleasure in the pain.

After this they could not stand on the calm, friendly footing they had both hoped for. He, at least, meant no wrong. She had hoped that the night might be regretful of the past, but had not dreamt that he would dare presume upon it.

For an hour or so after—the evening was over—the long dinner, the music in the parlor, the dark, the walk in the moonlight, with the young wife's arm about his waist—Ellen intended to make her visit very brief. In a little while, however, she changed her mind. She would stay. Yes, stay; and this wife, who boasted to her of her husband's love, should suffer a little also. What was she to come between them? And now all that was evil asserted itself in Ellen Harland's heart, and where evil once abides it grows stronger day by day.

She laughed, she flirted, she danced with other men, but she met Wilford alone by the banks of the river. She sang duets with this one, looked merrily into the eyes of that, but in the lonely woods she sat by Wilford's side with his arm about her waist.

They talked freely of the past now. He had confessed that she was yet more to him than any other woman; more than his trusting, unsuspecting wife. Only that little life stood between them, and often, as Ellen looked at Annie, she felt that she should be glad to see her in her coffin.

Yet the end of her visit approached. She must go, since she would have no excuse for lingering, and in her absence might not the wife win the heart of one who already respected and admired her, though his passion was another's? Surely.

So, with the friend's whisper in her ears, Ellen Harland one day walked out alone, making the purchase of some little trifle in the village an excuse for a solitary hour.

For a while she battled with her hate for Annie, knowing her to have none but friendly feelings to herself, but it overpowered her at last.

"If that little thing were dead," she said, "I should have Wilford for my own! I should be the lady of the Park—honored, admired, beloved. Now I walk here alone, while she fills my place. If she would but die!"

Then, suddenly—surely, Satan was whispering in her ears—she remembered that she had heard of a drug, which, though an almost instantaneous poison, left little trace and was tasteless. For a moment she trembled and flung the suggestion from her, but Satan is strong. There was a drug store in the village, and the proprietor had left a young, emphysematic clerk in charge.

The poison, which would not have been sold by the older man to any stranger without a doctor's prescription, was dealt out without a thought by this boy, and Ellen went home with the tiny package hidden in her bosom.

Annie was watching for her coming from the veranda. She came forward to meet her guest with a sweet smile.

Annie was watching for her coming from the veranda. She came forward to meet her guest with a sweet smile.

"The others have had lunch," said she, "but I waited for you. I have had our little table set in the bow-window, with the view of the river. We shall have such a cosy time."

Then she led the way to the dining-room, and tossing her hat and mantle on a sofa she handed a cup of coffee and a glass of wine to her guest, taking one for herself. At that moment some one called from the hall:

"Come, both of you; something to see."

It was only a great pleasure barge going up the river with a picnic party. Ever ready for anything amusing in those idle hours, the household always made a gay pretence of deep interest in these parties.

Annie left the little room. Ellen delayed a minute before she followed. In that little space of time she had emptied the poison into poor Annie's cup of coffee, and thrust the crumpled paper that had held it back into her bosom.

Annie returned first. As she seated herself, she happened to notice that the cup she had passed to Ellen was over-filled. It looked untidy, neither had yet been tasted, and with the natural impulse of a careful hostess, Annie changed the cups.

Little did she guess what she was doing. She only desired to set before her guest that which was neatest. And little did Ellen know what had happened in that brief instant.

She looked to see her rival turn pale. She watched for some token that the poison had begun its work. Instead she herself felt a strange faintness creeping over her, was conscious of a sudden agony. It was brief. The fate she had decreed for the innocent young wife was to be her own, and it came to swiftly too leave much time for thought.

Before the man who had ridden fast and furiously across the country to find the nearest doctor, had performed his errand, all was over.

Dying, Ellen Harland understood only that in some way Providence had outwitted her.

"Pray for me," she whispered to Annie. "I dare not pray for myself."

And with her hands held fast between Annie's, with Annie's tears falling fast upon her pillow, Ellen died.

They found the crumpled paper with "poison" written on it, in her bosom. The coroner's jury gave a verdict of suicide, and remorse filled Wilford Dumont's heart—for he believed that Ellen Harland had killed herself because she could not live without him.

In his trouble he made a sort of a confession to his wife. No man ever made a full and true one under such circumstances. What Annie gathered from it was, that her own attractions had made him forget those of Ellen Harland, and that the poor girl could not endure the sight of their mutual tenderness; and so to this day she believes, and often goes by her husband to the church-yard where Ellen lies, and with her own fair hands plant flowers upon the grave of the woman who might win for her to death that she might win for her own the husband who, though not true and perfect as Annie believes him, now loves her very fondly; loves her, though she remembers, with a pang, the passionate creature who, as he fancies, died for love of him.

In this world the truth will never be known, and it is better that it should be so.

BECAUSE strawberries are small, it does not follow that there are more of them to the quart, for the quart is frequently made smaller to match the strawberries.

A REPORTER who attended a banquet concluded his description with the candid statement that "it is not distinctly remembered by anybody present who made the last speech."

Fun in Florida.

In the winter of 1875 I was camped in the great Turnbull swamp, ninety miles south of St. Augustine, hunting deer, bears, wild cats, cougars, and wild turkeys. There was a great drouth, and the savannas and swamps were dry. Scores of alligators were to be seen in the swamps in search of water. One day Capt. Frank Sams and Tom Murray, two well-known guides, rode past the encampment. They were looking for sour orange stumps, with the intention of transplanting and grafting them. A hundred yards from camp they reined in their horses on a burnt savanna, and began to shout. Snatching a double-barrel gun, I ran out on the savanna. Their horses were prancing round an enormous bull alligator, who had crawled out of the dry swamp, and who was headed for the Hillsborough river. He was confused by the shouts of the guides and the prancing of their horses, and I approached him unseen. Stealing up to him, I fired a long palmetto splinter in his eye. He turned about, looking at him with convulsions. Driven to weariness, he crouched close to the ground, puffed out his throat, opened his cavernous mouth, and made a noise like the rushing of a wind. A moment afterward I discharged a load of buckshot into each eye. The monster shuddered, stretched himself in the agonies of death. Capt. Sams and Murray, who were standing by, were dismounted and buried his axe in the reptile's tail. The venetia was severed, and he was no longer dangerous, although there was still life in the tail. It moved slowly and uneasily, like the tail of a wounded snake, and the guides declared that it would not die until the setting of the sun. At intervals the cayman roared like a Central Park lion. Toward night I went to the swamp to mark the roosts of wild turkeys. The day was oppressively hot. I was returning towards camp long after dark, when I found myself upon the burnt savanna. To my surprise, the whole savanna seemed a live and moving. Nearly worn out with exhaustion, I fancied that my eyes were seeing a sure sign of marvellous power. The phenomena was quickly explained. A thousand buzzards were in the camp near the great alligator, awaiting the light of day to secure their prey. A year afterward I found the skeleton of this savanna, and knooked out its teeth. The savanna was then covered with water a foot deep.

In the following winter I was shooting plumed herons on the great savannas at the head of Indian river. My guide was the well-known Judge Connor, once a Methodist clergyman. One morning, while riding over the vast prairie on horseback, we met an alligator longer than the moral law. "Shoot him," said the judge.

"Oh, no," I replied; "I don't want to kill him. The report of the gun will scare up every heron within a mile, and I shall get no plumes."

"But, Lord blast my buttons," said the judge, "he eats my hogs and young calves on the range. Shoot him."

"No," I answered; "I've come twenty miles for plumes, and I don't intend to go back without them."

"Well," said Connor, "you're the first Yankee I ever saw who won't pull a trigger on a 'gator."

"I'll take a look at him, anyhow," I said, as I hitched my horse to a palmetto midway between two creeks. The grass was high and rank. As I walked toward the reptile he raised himself on his four legs, opened his jaws, puffed out his throat like a bullfrog, and made a noise like a humming of a buzz-saw. I stopped ten feet away, and stamped and shouted. The judge sat upon his horse watching the proceedings. The alligator did not quail. On the contrary, he squatted close to the ground, and began to creep towards me as a cat would creep toward a mouse. Walking back to the palmetto, I gathered five or six inches of his throat. He closed his mouth, and I struck a match, and set them ablaze. The ugly monster watched me like a dragon. I held the fans down, hid in the blaze, and marched toward him. His huge mouth was open, and looked like a newly-bricked tunnel. Within reach, I suddenly raised the fans, and thrust the blazing mass in his throat. He closed his mouth, and I struck a match, and set them ablaze. The ugly monster watched me like a dragon. I held the fans down, hid in the blaze, and marched toward him. His huge mouth was open, and looked like a newly-bricked tunnel. Within reach, I suddenly raised the fans, and thrust the blazing mass in his throat. He closed his mouth, and I struck a match, and set them ablaze.

Lighting a fresh fan, I ran around him, setting the coarse, dry grass of the savanna on fire. He was encircled with flames. He raised his body, gazed at the fire with bloodshot eyes, and then shuffled himself into the wet sand, and calmly awaited the result. There was a fair breeze from the northeast, and in three minutes the fire had swept over him, burying him in the blackened grass. He remained as he had planted himself. I went through the smoke and touched him with the barrel of the gun; but he did not move. He seemed dazed; possibly he had fainted. I remounted the horse, and rode off. A hushed young man, who was traveling leisurely over the smoking savanna toward a little stream that pours into the head of Indian river.

Two years before this I had visited Lake Worth, twelve miles beyond Jupiter. Right at that time Charles Moore, a jolly bonhomor, was the only person living on the shore of the lake. We went through the camp equipage and provisions on the hard sand at the northern end of the lake. The sand was fringed with huge rushes. He had hauled out his boat over the strip of sand separating the waters of the lake from the shore. He was endeavoring to get the boat over the rushes, intending to get the boat over the rushes, intending to get the boat over the rushes.

Moore's cabin was a low, round hut, built of mud, and was situated on the shore of the lake. He was endeavoring to get the boat over the rushes, intending to get the boat over the rushes, intending to get the boat over the rushes.

We found a cleared spot in the scrub a hundred feet back from the shore. Ridge poles and crocheted posts indicated that it was a favorite camping-ground for the Seminoles. On returning to the beach I found a two-foot alligator crawling toward our bag of powder. A score of companions were anchored off the shore, and one or two were following in his wake. On hearing my footsteps the old fellow turned and faced me. Our guns lay on a chest within three feet of him and we were cut off from our base of supplies.

Moore and Hammond, a Pennsylvania man, who had preened himself and heaved ridge-poles at the savage sound, but he was no go. He held the pass and his companions were moving on the porch. Something must be done or we would be left without provisions. My eyes fell on a bed of dried palm-leaf that had been used by the Indians. To gather and set them ablaze was the work of a few seconds. With the flaming work we advanced on the great lizards. In the light of the blaze they retreated to the lake. We suspended the bag of powder from a tree that hung over the bank, and in the morning the sand looked as though a rebel brigade had been throwing up trenches.

The inlet connecting the lake with the ocean has been closed by a bank of sand thrown up in an easterly hurricane. This bank I occupied for a week. Schools of spotted bass, snappers, groupers, croakers and white drum had been shut in the lake by the closing of the inlet. At high-tide the water from the ocean percolated through the sand, and the fishes swarmed to the bay to get a taste of the fresh salt water. While fishing here I discovered a large alligator regarding my movements with apparent interest. As he seemed civil and not evilly-disposed, I threw him in a twenty-pound bass, and he ate it with a relish. For six days he remained near me, reaping the harvest. He at last became so tame that he stationed himself dirty feet away, and received his fish with a hungry eagerness. He did not act the hog, neither was he a dog. He took on the fish, that were thrown to him. At one time a vicious bluefish snapped the line above the float, and a huge white drum ran off with the bait. I followed the float in a boat and secured it. When I returned the alligator was at his station, and a pile of chickens he had reserved for myself were undisturbed.

That's a Fact.

"That's a fact," said Mr. Hopkins as he laid down his paper the other evening, "every man, woman and child in the country ought to know how to swim. No one can tell what minute he will be upset, blown up or knocked overboard. Amanda, I'm going to learn you how to swim."

"Learn me?" queried the wife as she paused in her sewing.

"Yes, you. Your life is very precious to me, and I don't want you to lose it because you can't swim ashore when an accident takes place. I can swim like a duck myself, and I feel guilty to think we've been married twenty-one years and yet you'd go to the bottom like a stone if you fell overboard."

"Why, I never had the least fear," she replied. "There is always some hero around to rescue a lady."

"No one was to depend on heroes. Of course, I'd jump into the water to save a lady; but there are lots of men who wouldn't. Stand up, Amanda, and let me give you the motions of swimming. Now then, put your hands so, push them forward so, take a sweep and bring them back so. See how easy it's done? You mustn't forget to kick every time you move your arms."

She went through the motions several times, but so awkwardly that he called out:

"That isn't the way! The motions ought to be perfectly natural. Now imagine that you are out on an excursion."

"Yes."

"You lean over the rail to view some floating object."

"Yes."

"You suddenly grow dizzy and tumble headlong into the river. Now what motions would you make as you rose to the surface? What would you do?"

"Well, if a hero jumped in after me I'd lean my head on his shoulder like this and let him put his right arm around my waist and support me until help arrived."

"Hero be hanged! A hero would look nice looking up one hundred and ninety pounds, wouldn't he?"

"Hold 'o-k as you would! I don't believe you could keep your head above water to save your life."

"I couldn't, eh! Then I won't learn you a single stroke about swimming!"

"Then you needn't!"

"And if any man ever jumps overboard and rescues you I'll punch his head!"

"And if you ever jump in after anybody I know I'll have to pay the funeral expenses out of my share of this property!"

"Very well," said Mr. Hopkins as he put on his coat, "I see I am not wanted in my own house. If I am not home to-night it won't do you any good to telephone me at the office, for I shall have the wire grounded!"

Ice Without Freezing.

A new skating surface, called "crystal ice," has been invented by Prof. Calantraris, of Genoa, Italy. The fish-hawk will take after the spot and, with her improved apparatus, take up a quantity of the eggs, which will be hatched on board and subsequently distributed in favorable localities.

If the young fish survive, the well-known principle that they will at any risk or labor return to spawn to the spot where they first saw light on the water.

Next June the Fish-hawk will be taken to the spot and, with her improved apparatus, take up a quantity of the eggs, which will be hatched on board and subsequently distributed in favorable localities.

Messrs Rowan, Dean and I bought two bales of new cotton from the farm of Mr. Rowan, and this week another bale of the same farm. Up to the time they have received six bales of new cotton and would have more, but for the rains of the last few days. Prices have ruled 10 to 11 cents. This is a price considering the enormous crop made in the South this year. The early seller will get the price we predict, considering the difference in weights &c. of old and new cotton.
We are indebted to Mr. Deaven for the best water-melon we have seen this year.
Wm. H. Kottney arrived in Jacksonville Wednesday, where he has been spending some weeks with his daughter, Mrs. Baker.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 30.
The trial of Arnold for the murder of Little, closed at Nicholson's yesterday with a verdict of guilty. The killing occurred on the 10th of December, at Rich- land, where both men were residents. On the morning of the trial, Arnold went to Little's office in the absence of any one shot him dead. The ver- diction was rendered in a court room. Arnold's friends and surrounded him, while he covered him with her body, and he was being killed. A guard subsequently took the prisoner to his room.

OXFORD ITEMS.
DEATHS.
Mr. Wm. Bledsoe's youngest son, aged about five years, died yesterday. Mr. Bledsoe lives about four miles South-east of here.
Mrs. Maria, wife of Thos. Leimaster, (Sr.), died at her home a few miles Southeast of here, last Tuesday, at the age of 67 years.
ACCIDENTS.
R. P. Jones, resident painter, fell from a scaffold last Monday and sprained his ankle.
Mrs. King, an aged widow, probably seventy five years old, whose home is in the suburbs of this city, encountered a severe misfortune last Monday night by leaning upon a rickety wash bench, which gave away, letting her fall to the ground and breaking her thigh just above the knee.
Joseph Terry, laborer on farm of W. F. Higgins, one mile east of town, received a terrible, if not fatal injury, a few days ago, by falling backwards upon the end of a shovel-handle, which he had left standing in a ditch. The instrument pushed through his clothing and penetrated his body seven inches, reaching the bladder, and inflicting indeter- minable injuries upon that organ.
OXFORD ON A BOOM.
Our little town is now making a fresh start in the way of improvements, several new and substantial houses being in the course of construction, and rents advancing to unprecedented figures. A stranger offered, yesterday, two hundred dollars in advance for the rent of small store room which will be ready for occupancy within a few days. The offer was refused, and the stranger sought another field.
THE OXFORD EDITION.
is opening unusually early. The first bale brought to this market was grown by Mr. Andy Ritchie, near Eastaboga, Talladega county, and sold for 12 cents. Mr. John Huey, of the same neighbor- hood reached town probably the same day with his first bale and walked off with 12 1/2. Mr. John Easterwood, of Alexandria valley in this County, also brought in a new bale last week, but your correspondent did not learn what he sold it for. The receipts are increas- ing right rapidly this week, eight bales being sold here yesterday. The pros- pect of this season bids fair to exceed that of the last, which was greatly in excess of any previous season.
The opening of a new market so near here, by the establishment of a factory at Anniston, will draw all the business from adjacent counties, and the vigilant eyes of Oxford business men will hard- ly be found closed when opportunities like the drunkard's buttermilk, are "lying round loose."
A HANCOCK AND ENGLISH FLAG.
The raising of a Hancock and English flag here, 12 by 21 feet dimensions, on a pole 100 feet high, is an item that I think has never found its way into print. The pole stands on the side of the hill on the east side of the depot which position affords an excellent view from the railroad, as well as from every part of our town. In fact the flag may be seen in almost any direction for miles around. It peers through the gap of mountains between here and Anniston and is visible seven miles up the Choctaw- co valley.

A shocking accident occurred on the Lowell and Lawrence railroad near here Saturday night. Five youths, who attended the Caldo- nia picnic at Smith's grove, clamb- ered on to a passenger car in the train which left Lawrence at 7:30 p. m. When the train reached Sprague's bridge, near this city, all were swept off and killed. At the time it was only known that one had met death in this manner. He was thrown between the cars under the platform and found by the conductor. Later the track men found the bodies of the others lying in ditches, either side of the track, near the bridge. Their ages ranged from fifteen to seventeen years.

WHIP-POOR-WILL.

Up rose the moon o'er the low-lying mountain,
Sparkled, and danced, in the silvery rill,
While forth from the elm-tree, hard by the fountain,
Floated the notes of a lone whip-poor-will.

Softly the breath of the evening allured me
Away from my couch; and I leaned on the sill,
As the calm of the hour again reassured me,
I heard in the distance the lone whip-poor-will.

Sharp as the swirl of a willow it sounded—
Sharp on the balm of the evening still;
Back from the mountain the clear echoes bounced—
Bounded the wail of the lone whip-poor-will.

Back to my couch, as the evening star faded;
Back as the breeze, from the meadows blew
chill,
While the moon from my vision by clouds was obscured,
Again broke the plaint of the lone whip-poor-will.

Forgive Him!

"Forgive him!" said Mrs. Stains. "Oh, William, forgive him!"

The speaker was an aged woman and a widow. Her head was white with the frost of years, and her mid features were deeply marked by the hand of time. There was a tear in her eye, and her face was clouded with sorrow. She spoke to her son, a mid die-aged, strong-featured person, whose countenance betrayed a firm-willed, unbending heart, but yet who appeared an upright, honorable man.

"Forgive him!" repeated the white-haired widow, as she raised her trembling hands towards her son. "He is your brother—your only brother. Oh, if you know your own heart, you will forgive him."

"Never!" spoke William Stains, in a firm, deep tone. "John has wronged me—deeply wronged me—and I should be to my soul were I to forgive him now."

"And have not you wronged him?" asked the widow, impressively.

"I wronged him? How?"

"By withholding from him your love by treating him harshly, and causing him to sin," answered his mother, kindly.

"Cease, mother. When you say that I have caused him to sin, you are mistaken. He has chosen his own path, and now he must travel in it."

"William, you are the oldest, and from you should come the love that can alone heal the wound between yourself and John."

"Listen to me, mother," said the stubborn man, with a piece of bitterness in his tone. "John has been unjust to me—he has been unkind and unkind. He has injured me beyond repair."

"No, no, William," interrupted his mother, "not beyond repair."

"Yes, he has injured my feelings by the most fatal darts of malice and ill-will. He has told falsehoods about me to my friends, and even assailed my private character."

"And can you not forgive all this?" she asked, tenderly.

"Perhaps I might," returned William Stains, "but," he added, in a hoarse tone, while his frame quivered with deep feeling, "he has done more than that. He has spoken of my wife, and—But I will not tell it all. I cannot forgive him this!"

"Forgive him, and be happy. His heart is as kind as yours, and he is all generosity and love to his friends. More than forty years have passed over John's head, and during all that time he never spoke one unkind word to his poor mother."

"And did I ever speak unkindly to you, my mother?" asked William Stains, in a half-lushed voice.

"No, no; you and John have both kind hearts, and it grieves me sorely to see you as you are now. Ah, William, I fear that you do not perceive how noble a thing it is to forgive those who have injured you."

The man made no reply to his mother. He saw that she was unhappy, and he knew that he was himself unhappy also. In former years he had loved his brother, and he knew that he had been faithfully loved in return. The trouble which had so unfortunately separated them, had been trivial in its beginning; but William's sternness of will and John's hastiness of temper had kept the fire on the increase. The first fault had belonged to the younger brother, but a word of explanation at the time might have healed it without any trouble; now, however, the affair had become deep and dangerous, and there was but one way for remedy. That way the aged mother would point out.

"William," continued Mrs. Stains, speaking in a trembling tone, "I can spend but a few short days longer on earth. I feel that the sands in my glass have almost all run out; but before I depart I hope I may meet my two boys together in love—I hope I may see them once more bound together in the sweet bonds of friendship. When you were babies, I nursed you and cared for you, and I tried to do a mother's duty. I tried to make you both fit for the great world. As you grew older I promised myself a full share of happiness in your companionship, and naught has come to dim the joy of my widowed heart, till this sad cloud lowered upon me. I love my children; I love them both alike—and yet they love not each other. William, my son, one thing weighs heavily upon me. Should this thing last till I am dead, then how will you and John meet by the side of my corpse? How will you feel when you come to—"

"Hush, my mother!" uttered the stout man, trembling like a reed. "Say no more now. This evening I will speak to you my mind."

John Stains sat in his easy chair in his own cozy parlor, and about him were his wife and children. Everything that money could procure toward real comfort was his; yet he was not happy. Amid all his comforts there was one dark cloud to trouble him. The spot where for long years he had nurtured a brother's love was now vacant. No, not vacant, for he was filled with bitterness. He knew that he was in the fault, but he tried to excuse himself by thinking that his brother hated him. This, however, did not ease his conscience, for he knew that he was lying to himself.

While he sat thus he heard a rap at the front door, and in a few minutes one of the children told him that "Uncle William" wanted to see him.

"Tell him to come in," said John; and after this he made a motion for his wife and children to leave the room. "I shall budge an inch," he muttered to himself, "if he thinks to frighten me, he'll find his mistake."

Before he could say more, his brother entered the room.

"Good evening, John," said William, in a kindly tone, at the same time laying his hat on the table.

John Stains was taken all aback by this address, and he could hardly believe his ears; but he responded hesitatingly to the salutation. For an instant he looked up into his brother's face, and during that instant there flashed across his mind a wish that he had never offended.

"John," continued William, still standing, "you know well what has passed to make us both unhappy."

"Yes, I know," answered John, hardly knowing what tone to assume.

"Well, my brother," continued William, while a tear glistened in his eye, and at the same time extending his hand, "I have come to bury the evil that has risen up between us. If you have wronged me, I freely forgive you; if I have been harsh and unbrotherly towards you, I ask that you will forget it. Come, let us be friends once more."

Like an electric shock came this speech upon the ears of John Stains. A moment he stood half bewildered, and then the tears broke forth from his eyes. He reached forth his hand, but his words were broken and indistinct. He had not expected this from his stern brother; but it came like a heavenly beam of light to his soul, and in a moment more the brothers were folded in a warm embrace. When they were aroused, it was by feeling a trembling hand laid upon their heads; and when they looked up they found their aged mother standing by them.

"Bless you, my children, bless you!" murmured the white-haired parent, as she raised her hands towards heaven; "and oh, I pray our Maker that you may never be unhappy more."

John Stains knew that his mother had been the angel who had touched the heart of his brother, and it did not alter his forgiveness.

"Oh," he murmured, "I have been very wrong—I have abused you, my brother; but if you can forgive me, I will try to make it all up."

"Your love will repay it all, John. Let me have your love, and I will try never to lose it more."

"Now I am truly happy," said the aged mother, as she gazed with pride upon her sons. "Now I can die in peace. Oh, my boys, if you would have your children sure of happiness in after life, teach them that forgiveness will heal social wounds which can be healed in no other way. Many a heart has been broken from the simple want of that talismanic power."

Both these brothers tried to bless their mother for the healthful lesson she had taught them, and they failed not to teach it to their children as one of the best boons that could be given them for life.

A certain gentleman requiring legal assistance had been recommended to one of two brothers, but he had forgotten the Christian name of the one first found and asked for Mr. Podger.

"That is my name, sir."

"But there are two of you of that name here in town?"

"Yes."

"Well, I wish to consult the Mr. Podger—excuse me for the allusion—who wears a wig."

"We both wear wigs, sir."

"Well, the man I seek was divorced from his wife not long ago."

"There, you hit us both again, sir."

"The man to whom I was recommended has recently been accused of forgery, though I trust unjustly."

"There we are again, my dear sir. We have both had that gentle insinuation laid at our doors."

"Well, upon my word, you two brothers have a striking resemblance. But I guess I have it now. The one I am after is in the habit of occasionally drinking to excess—sometimes to intoxication."

Changed by Years.

She was a pretty girl, was Jennina—petite—that's what I like—bright eyes, luxuriant locks, a white and pink complexion, plump and compact. She was always in good humor, and we soon became the very best of friends—my more—for who could help being affectionate toward her? Everybody loved her. When the boatmen called her "a sweet little craft," they expressed though vulgarly, the sentiment of my own heart. I was in love with Jennina, and Jennina—well, Jennina was not indifferent to me. I had not nerve to ask her, in so many words, would she accept my hand and name. I spelt a quire of paper in the effort to utter my thoughts in a letter; so at last, on her birthday, the 15th of May, I ventured to present her with an elegant bound book, and on a little slip of paper inside I wrote:

"DEAR JENNINA—By the acceptance of this trifling gift let me know you accept the giver."

Alfred Bainbridge Doughty.

I flattered myself it was rather a plucky thing to do, and it answered admirably. I thought, and when we were alone together, and I was standing rather near her, and said: "You received my humble offering."

She burst into a flood of tears, put her arms round my neck, and spoilt my shirt front.

Then, when she recovered a little (do you believe in Nibbs? I don't) she said:

"Have you asked for?"

"Of course I responded I had not."

"Then do at once," she said; "for goodness gracious me, if he was to find us out in anything silly, and trying to keep it from him, it would be awful!"

It is a good deal worse asking the governor than asking the girl, especially such a peppery old party as Captain Wattleborough; however I screwed myself up, and when Jennina was down about the place, playing on our piano, and I knew he would be making his evening toilet, by putting on a pilot coat, I ventured to look in upon him.

After a few words on ordinary topics, such as how were we both, how was the weather, I hemmed and began, "Captain, I am ambitious."

"Fight boy—climb as high as you can."

"Don't encourage me too much, Captain; I'm ambitious in your direction."

"Boy, you're not going to sea?"

"No, Captain—I—I—I aspire to the honor of being your son-in-law!"

The Captain looked me full in the face, then said:

"Have you money?"

"Of course I have, and he told me to go and get it before venturing to aspire to the honor of being your son-in-law!"

The Captain looked me full in the face, then said:

ga, enent.

That afternoon she wrote a note to me, suggesting the very same idea to me. Our cross letters crossed.

We are to be friends—nothing more. But that could not last. I was the first to give in. I called upon her, and said a good deal, and she cried, and then we said why not? and then she put her head upon my breast and spoiled my shirt front as she had done before.

"You are not so very fat," she said, laughing.

"You are not so very lean," I said, laughing also.

"You can wear a scalp," she said.

"You can dye," I responded.

She both laughed again, and it was all settled. We were settled, and here we are out of the fog, and very much at your service—the happiest couple in our town.

Fontainebleau.

The forest of Fontainebleau, covers 42,000 acres and is sixty miles in circumference. Most of the trees are very old, and to the most remarkable ones are affixed small plaques giving the particulars of their history.

Originally the dunes were named the Fontainebleau from the fact that King Louis IX, while hunting in one of his wildest parts, lost one of his favorite hounds, whose name was Bleau. The dog was found quietly drinking from a spring of cool water, which the king named Fontainebleau, or Bleau's fountain. Struck with the beauty of the spot, the king ordered a hunting mansion to be built near the spring, and this hunting box has in successive reigns been enlarged and beautified till it became the stately palace which all visitors to the environs of Paris know so well.

In Francis I's time, tradition says, the forest was infested by an enormous serpent, which gobbled up men, women and children in large numbers. As there were no snake-charmers sufficiently courageous to attack the monster, King Francis determined to try his hand on it, and caused a suit of armor to be made of razors, with the edges pointing outwards, and the serpent met his death.

The library of the palace contains many of the first books seen in France. In Charles VII's reign the 553 books therein contained were worth the present sum of $18,100. The English carried off the books when they were rulers in France, but they were bought back at the cost of $250.

In the Hotel d'Albret, in the Cour du Cardinal Richelieu, when attending on the court. Here was taken ill and was removed to Paris on a litter. The litter was too wide to pass through the door of the hotel and was lifted out through a window. In 1657, Christina, Queen of Sweden, while visiting at the palace, caused Mousquetaire, one of her favorites, to be assassinated. Cardinal Mazarin, order of the king, wrote to her to leave the palace. She replied by ordering Mazarin to mind his own business; as a queen was always a queen wherever she happened to be. Fontainebleau was the scene of many of the triumphs of Louis XIV. and Voltaire. The latter, however, was requested to leave the palace, an unsatisfactory remark he had made, having come to the care of royalty. The abdication of Napoleon I. was signed at Fontainebleau and here the petit corporal kept Pope Pius VII. prisoner for the space of two years, on account of some slight difference of opinion between himself and the successor of St. Peter. In the Cour du Chateau Blanc, Napoleon took his leave of the Old Guard when he started on his trip of exile to Elba.

A Summer Voyage on the Tropicat

This branch of the Delaware, so far as I could learn, had a few years been descended by a white man in a boat. Rafts of pine and hemlock timber are run down on the spring and fall freshets, but of pleasure seekers in boats I appeared to be the first.

My advent was a surprise to most creatures in the water and on the bank. I rounded an elbow in the stream, and those remaining log-deep in the water turned their heads at my approach, snarled their unfinished cuds, and scampered off as if they had seen a spectre. I surprised the fish on their spawning beds and feeding grounds; they scattered, as my shadow glided down upon them, like chickens when a hawk appears. I surprised an ancient fisherman seated on a spot of gravelly beach, with his back up stream, and leisurely angling in a deep, still eddy, and mumbling to himself. As I slipped into the circle of his vision, his under jaw dropped and he was too bewildered to reply to my salutation for some moments.

I turned a bend in the river and I looked back, and saw him hastening away with great precipitation. I presume he had angled there for forty years without having his privacy thus intruded upon. I surprised hawks and herons and kingfishers. I came suddenly upon muskrats, and raced with them down the riffs, they having no time to take to their holes. At one point, as I rounded an elbow in the stream, a black eagle sprang from the top of a dead tree, and hopped hurriedly away. A kingbird gave chase, and disappeared for some moments between the great wings of the eagle, and I imagined him seated upon his back delivering his puny blows upon the royal bird. I interrupted two or three muskrats, and saw them scurry to their holes. They would dart under the bank when they saw me, then presently thrust out their snout, waddle-like noses, to see if the danger was imminent. At one point, in a little cove behind the willows, I surprised some scold-grubs, with skirts amazingly abbreviated, waddling and plucking in the water. As much surprised as any, I am sure, was that hard-worked looking housewife, when I came up from under the bank in front of her house, and with pail in hand appeared at her door and asked for milk, taking the precaution to intimate that I had no objection to the yellow scum that is supposed to rise on a fresh article of that kind.

"What kind of milk do you want?"

"The best you have. Give me two quarts of it," I replied.

"What do you want to do with it?" with an anxious tone, as if I might want to blow something or burn her barn with it.

"Oh, drink it," I answered, as if I frequently put milk to that use.

"Well, I suppose I can get you some," and she presently reappeared with swimming pail, with those little yellow flakes floating about upon it that one likes to see.

Thronedjem.

The town has little in itself to attract attention. Though founded about the year 1000, it has so often been destroyed by fire that few traces of its antiquity remain. The streets are wide and regular, and there are houses for the most part built of brick or stone; thus, the wooden aspect, so characteristic of Norway and so quaint, is here found wanting. So far one is a little disappointed in Thronedjem. It has held an important place in early Norwegian history. One's ideas of it have been formed in imagination at the impressionable age when "Andersen's Tales" are devoured in implicit faith. The mind, in connection with it, is imbued with a vision of all that is old and quaint that is miraculous—from a fairy-tale point of view. Therefore, awakening to the discovery that the ancient town, with its rich, grand, rolling name, its tradition of wise men—the most northern of the large towns of Europe—would not be out of place in any near, even the most southern towns of that quarter of the globe, gives rather a rude shock to the feelings, bewilders the imagination, disturbs the boundary mark between fact and fancy, and causes a little of the romance attending this wonderful and beautiful country to melt away, just as everything is at present melting away under the influence of the fierce midday sun. We found ourselves in the market-place, a large, wide square, from which the four leading thoroughfares of Thronedjem open out. It was as modern as anything you could wish to see. This morning it was half covered with booths and stalls, the buyers and sellers not even glancing at the pictures. At the end of one of these thoroughfares stood the cathedral, the great and special attraction of Thronedjem—its glory, as it is that of Norway itself, the one solitary piece of architecture that it possesses. But out in its first impression is Thronedjem disappointing. The cathedral makes up for a great deal, and, as we visited, memory fastens upon this piece of antiquity for its association with the ancient capital. And again, though the actual situation of the town is not so picturesque and quaint as that of Bergen, yet the neighborhood of Thronedjem is full of beauty, more luxuriant and fertile than anything we have yet seen in Norway. It is situated at the mouth of the Nid, and during the first four centuries of its existence was called Nidaros. Thronedjem signifies "The Throne's Home." It is here that all the Kings are crowned. But at the union of Sweden with Norway it ceased to be the capital, the seat of Government, and the royal residence. So far its glory has departed.

Rescued by A Dog.

Recently a number of soldiers went from Fort Craig to the Rio Grande for a bath. Among them was Captain Jack Crawford. After being in the water about three-quarters of an hour Captain Jack started to cross toward the other side over a sand-bar, on which the water was only from six inches to a foot deep. Several of the others had followed Jack, and they had commenced for tripping each other and rolling over in the water, while two of the boys got Jack down in the shallow water and tickled him in the ribs until he was nearly exhausted with laughter, he being very ticklish. In order to get away from his tormentors Jack rolled over towards the deep water, on the lower edge of the bar, and when he got up on his feet he kept backing down stream, and although there was not over two feet of water where he stood, yet the current was so strong that it would carry him down should he lose his footing. He kept splashing water on those who had been tickling him and hattering them to come on after him, when suddenly he made two or three desperate efforts to get back, but failed. Yet he said no word or the others might have joined hands and reached for him. No one dreamed for a moment that he was trying to extricate himself from the quicksand. All at once he went down like a piece of lead. Even then we thought he had taken a dive until he was under water longer than a man would willingly stay, and indeed

We learn that a young Mr. Pike shot a young man named Dickey, some five miles above this place a few days ago. Dickey was shot through the thigh, but is not dangerously wounded. We did not learn the facts that led to the difficulty.

Owing to a serious accident to our pressman Friday evening, we fail to get the Saturday morning's mail off. We tried to get another pressman Friday night, but failed. We regret it.

TERRAPIN CREEK LOCALS. Hurrah for Hancock and English. Wilson Bros. have just completed their new dam across the creek, which gives them ample water power to run their fine flouring and saw mills, presided over by that prince of millers, Frank Harris; also their celebrated Brown cotton gin both day and night. They can now accommodate the neighbors and will gin for them on liberal terms and short notice. Here you will find the genial Jerry and Captain Bill always on hand (the handsome one of the family, old Cap, having moved to Jacksonville to run the merchant's department.) The neighborhood is lively. They have a Good Templar Lodge with a large membership and a good house of worship. With such good works they are bound to succeed. Crops looking well, considering the six weeks' drought. Late rains have brought things all out right. The neighborhood is in splendid health, excepting some sickness among the babies. Mr. J. E. Graham and Sam Hill both have lately lost children.

Mr. F. Adams, late an Independent candidate for Probate Judge in Cherokee County, but withdrawn from the race when John Huggitt, a former Republican, announced his candidacy. Mr. Adams is a patriotic gentleman, and we trust he may speedily recover.

We were pleased to see from a copy of the Montgomery Advertiser last week, that our former associate, Mr. C. H. Francis, had become a member of the firm of T. Francis & Co. He has been some years salesman in the Montgomery Advertiser, and has been taken in one of the members. The Montgomery Advertiser speaks in high terms of his business qualifications.

We congratulate Charlie upon his promotion and rejoice in his Protracted meeting will commence at the M. E. Church in this place to-day (Saturday) and may continue throughout the next week. We sincerely hope it may result in great spiritual good to our community.

A tramp was lodged in the Calaboose here Tuesday charged with throwing the train off the track of the S. R. & D. Railroad seven miles above here. A rail had been placed along side the iron rail to do the work. The train sustained no serious damage.

OXFORD ITEMS.

Oxford, Ala., Sept. 9. A Word To The "I. C." By the substitution of a "9" for a "0" last week, the printer added 90 feet to our flag pole, and raised Hancock & English to an altitude of 196 feet—a pretty critical height for four hundred pounds of presidential timber to be attached to so slender a thing as a pole. Please subtract the 90 feet and the remainder will represent the exact height of our pole above the ground; that is, 106 feet.

OXFORD COLLEGE. The fall session of Oxford College opened week before last. Up to this writing the attendance has reached 135. The roll rarely ever reaches its maximum under several weeks from the beginning of a session. No change has been made in the corps of teachers.

DEATHS. A young girl who was reared by Samuel Ashley near here, in Talladega county, died last week.

Willie, infant son of E. P. Jones, of this place, died last Sunday.

A PAPER THAT FILLS THE BILL. A few weeks ago Dr. Henry Snow asked your correspondent to name the "dirtiest, meanest, low downest, stinkin' Radical paper in these United States." He wanted to subscribe for it, and keep posted on both sides of politics. I put in nomination the Chicago Inter-Ocean, and the Doctor has since been one of its readers. The other day he was asked if the paper came up to the above mentioned requisites. "Yes," said he, "you might drag that stinkin' paper through these streets and smell its tracks a half an hour after it passes!"

TWO PRISONERS RETURNED TO CHEROKEE.

A gentleman of the name of Ellis who emigrated a few years ago from Cherokee county, in this State, to the State of Texas, passed up the railroad last Saturday with two prisoners, including conveying the fugitives to Cherokee county, where they are charged with the murder of a man named Firtstone, which tragedy was enacted several years ago. After the murder these prisoners fled and took refuge in the Indian Territory, among the Choctaws. Through some ruse of a detective they were lured across the line into Texas and were there captured, probably at the instance of Mr. Ellis. The prisoners are brothers by the name of Thompson.

THE MERCHANTS.

of this place met yesterday afternoon in solemn convocation, and among other things resolved to reduce the cost of weighing a bale of cotton to fifteen cents. The cost of this service last season was twenty cents, but a few weeks ago the railroad agent here advanced the price to twenty five cents, the weighing being one of the perquisites to his office. The merchants think that amount is too high, hence they petitioned the aforesaid railroad functionary yesterday to reduce the price to fifteen cents, intimating that a refusal of this redress would cause them to establish another pair of scales with a salaried weigher. They say they are determined that the tariff shall have his cotton weighed here at fifteen cents.

ANOTHER RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

The south bound passenger train jumped the track near Blue Mountain yesterday about two o'clock. Everything went off except the engine; but no one was hurt and the damage was trifling. The delay was about six hours. Conductor Dunn said last night that he had seen no signs of obstruction, nor of the road being tampered with. You, Mr. Editor, can relate the particulars of the disaster wrought by a fiend above Jacksonville day before yesterday, by tying a rail across the track. Conductor Dunn said they had "that coon" in jail.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Joseph Tary, the man who sat down on a perpendicular shovel handle, is still living, and hopes are entertained of his recovery. Cotton receipts are increasing rapidly. Conkling Booker, who got in the way of Sprague Allen's shot in a Nacogdoches affair, some time since, has recovered. These parties are Republicans, but they are more highly colored than their notorious prototypes. The Baptists of this place are now holding their annual revival meeting. The next office has been removed to the room of the Gunners Building. The Deacons are authorized on all questions relating to church.

CITIZEN.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA. Probate Court for said County, Special Term Sept. 1st 1880. This day came Solie P. Hubbard, and produces and files in Court a paper purporting to be the last will and testament of Court to admit to said will, and moves the Court to admit the said will to Probate. It is therefore ordered, that on the 30th day of September 1880 be set, for the hearing of the said application, and that notice thereof be given by publication in the Jacksonville Republican a newspaper published in said county for three successive weeks from said date, as a notice to Elizabeth McMillan wife of Sam'l McMillan, Mary E. Bully For Maine! Goodbye Blaine!

Have you heard the news from Maine? It is good. It is better than was hoped for! It is the best thing that has happened in this Presidential campaign.

The fact is Maine has smashed the Radical Machine, and surprised everybody by electing a Fusion Governor over the Radical nominee, and by making Congressional gains. The politicians are taken as much aback by the result as when long years ago she "Went bell bent For Governor Kent."

The only difference this time is that the gallant Pine State of Maine has set down on Jim Blaine.

Why, it is almost enough to give that faithful follower of the bloody shirt an other sun stroke!

This unexpected result will be inspiring to the Democracy all over the land, and will almost certainly influence the Indiana election in October in favor of the Democratic party. Should Indiana go Democratic in October, as is now confidently expected, the Radicals may well throw up the sponge. Following that will be a tidal wave victory for Hancock in the Union.

All honor to Maine! Goodbye Blaine!

To show our readers the extent of the victory over Radicalism in Maine, we quote below the Radical majority for Governor at the September elections for Governor in each Presidential year since the party was formed, up to the recent election at which that party met a Waterloo defeat.

In 1856 the Radical majority for Governor in the September election preceding the Presidential election was 17,881.

In 1860 it was 11,988.

In 1864 it was 15,913.

In 1868 it was 20,403.

In 1872 it was 17,216.

In 1876 it was 15,444.

In 1880 the Fusionists defeated the Radical candidate for Governor in the September election preceding the Presidential election by a majority of from 1,000 to 2,000. In other words there has been a change since the electoral fraud of 1876 of 16,000 or 17,000 votes. And they all went out and knaved a file, each man his own file.

Of all the floundering for fools that we have ever heard of the "rebel claims" dish that Radical orators and speakers are serving out to the Northern people, "takes the rag off the bush." All that the Southern people ask of our fellow-countrymen across the line is to let the South alone and allow her to work out her own material destiny. The Southern people have sense enough to know that the Federal Constitution stands in the way of payment of these claims, and moreover they are able to get along without them. Time and good crops are doing enough for the enrichment of the South. The Southern people have no desire to get their hands into the Federal treasury; and the Radical orator or editor who makes a contrary assertion, is an unscrupulous liar, or an unmitigated ass.

The mistake the Radicals and some Northern Democrats make is that every man with a black skin in the South votes the Radical ticket, when the truth is nearly half of them, at least in Alabama, are straight out Democrats. The last political meeting the Republican colored people held in this county, but a few months ago, they denounced by resolution as false the statement that the colored people were in any way interested with in the exercise of their political rights, and thanked by name several white Democrats for courtesies extended them in connection with that very political meeting. The salaried organs, however, will not publish this. They prefer to assume that we people down here don't engage in much else beside persecution of Radical darkies.

The Radical papers are still flaunting Weaver's lie to the effect that a prominent citizen of Mississippi told him (Weaver) that he, the prominent citizen, could not live a day in Mississippi, if Hancock should be elected, when, in fact, the prominent citizen has long since in a published card denied that he ever had any such conversation with Weaver. It seems that Weaver is a very able-bodied liar and the Radical papers of the North are his sponsors.

The wilful misrepresentation of the Southern people by the Radical press of the North is perfectly astounding. We are loath to believe that the masses of the Northern people are such fools as to be gulled by such stuff as the Radical papers daily lay before them concerning the South and the designs of her people.

The Radicals have two candidates in the field in Gen. Shelly's Congressional District, and that Rebel Brigadier will

An Alabamian in New York.
It will be seen from the extract below, which we copy from the Geneva Gazette, that Maj. J. H. Francis is doing service for Hancock and English in the State of New York. From extracts from other papers we learn that he is doing valuable work for the Democracy, and his services are in much demand.

We regret to have to say that he has not altogether smooth sailing up there in the State of New York as elsewhere there are ruffians, and one of these, a man named Thompson, Radical candidate for County Judge of Yates county, repeatedly attempted to insult him while he was speaking at Elmira. We have a certificate of three responsible citizens of Elmira to this effect. When Mr. Francis told the people of how Judge Pope had been dragged from the bench here and imprisoned by a little upstart Lieutenant of the Federal army this ruffian pronounced the statement false. As much as has been untruthfully said about the lawlessness of the South, we venture the assertion that no Democratic office-seeker in the South would have been guilty of the ruffianism displayed by this man Thompson. Had such a thing occurred here it would have been heralded as a rebel outrage and the bloody shirt organs would have said at once that free speech is denied here. The people of Yates county will reflect no credit on themselves by electing this ruffian in Thompson their County Judge. We would defeat a man down here for such an act of ruffianism.

Despite all the Thompsons in the State of New York, however, that State will go for Hancock and English by a very large majority. Every indication points to it, as well as to the triumph of the ticket throughout the country.

The Gazette says:

Our Democratic friends south of Geneva at Lodi, North Hestor, Elmira, Starkey, Dundee, and rural towns back from the shores of Seneca Lake have been holding enthusiastic meetings for the past two weeks. Many fine hickory poles have been raised, from the tops of which float the stars and stripes, with streamers carrying the names of Hancock and English. Hon. D. A. Ogden is throwing his whole soul into the canvass, making effective speeches wherever called. Maj. J. H. Francis of Alabama, clerk in the House of Representatives, a gentleman thoroughly posted on the Southern question and familiar with the "rebel war claims" bugbear, particularly has spoken at all those places holding the people for an hour or more while he opened their eyes as to the true state of affairs in his section. He explains fully why no "rebel claims" can be paid, and why the ex-Confederates in Congress are reluctant about endorsing any of these claims. And the colored voters hereabouts are getting information direct from headquarters why the negroes in the South vote the Democratic ticket solidly. Mr. Francis has been invited to speak in Geneva before the close of the campaign, and we learn casually that the State Central Committee are in correspondence with him with a view to sending him in different portions of the State. We have known that our people even the sturdiest Democrats among us, were not pestered upon these questions, and they as well as our white friends will flock to hear him when he is announced.

The Watkins (N. Y.) Democrat has this to say of Mr. Francis' speech, and the ruffianism of the man Thompson. It seems that Thompson was a coward as well as ruffian, judging from the manner in which that one armed Union soldier made him close his mouth.

The Democrats of Elmira raised a pole in honor of Hancock and English on Saturday last. Quite a large crowd of citizens of Yates County were in attendance, speeches were made by Hon. D. A. Ogden of Penn Yan and J. H. Francis of Alabama, who is spending the summer at North Hestor. Mr. Francis was constantly and insistently interrupted during the course of his speech by a Mr. Thompson, a Republican of some prominence in that county. He was finally induced to cease his interruptions by Mr. Eugene Smith, a one-armed Union Democratic soldier, who threatened him with personal violence if he did not desist. It is a singular interruption of a Northern Republican speaker in a Southern town, the fact would have been heralded throughout the North as "another rebel outrage," and held up to the Northern people as evidence of the way free speech is treated in the South. Mr. Francis has made a number of Democratic speeches in this and adjoining counties but this is the first flagrant interference he has met with. He will address the people of Schuyler County, in this village, on the 23d inst., and we will speak for him a full house.

We notice that many of our exchanges speak in high terms of Horace R. Hood, of the Monroe Journal, for Assistant Clerk of the next House of Representatives. Mr. Hood is a gentleman of excellent qualifications for the place, and he has, since his connection with the press been a faithful and consistent party worker. Other things being equal, we believe in rewarding those who have been active in party service, and we hope Representatives from this section of the State will take Mr. Hood's claim under consideration. He is worthy the place.

WASHINGTON.
THE MAINE ELECTION AN ASTONISHING AND SENSATION.
WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.
The news from Maine has astonished everybody and produced a tremendous sensation. The Democrats are surprised and delighted. They were prepared to see a Republican majority of 5,000, and upwards, and a solid Republican delegation to Congress. The Republicans had counted on carrying the State by 10,000 and making a clean sweep for Legislature, Congressmen and Governor. They are thoroughly cowed and demoralized by this stunning defeat.

It is the general belief of the Democrats to-day that the election has fallen out of the Garfield party, and henceforth the Democratic party will carry everything before it.

Notwithstanding the most careful polling of the votes, the party managers in Maine on both sides, were entirely wrong in their calculation. It is now apparent that there was an unexpected popular movement which operated silently in favor of the Democratic party without attracting attention. It looks now as if there would be a ground swell everywhere in favor of Hancock which will produce very remarkable results in

This is the way the big Radicals talk before the Maine election. They are singing a somewhat different tune now:

Senator Blaine says: "We will probably have 8,000 majority, carry the Legislature and make a clean sweep of Congressmen, retaining the one we lost in 1878."

Senator Hamlin—"Our majority will be not less than 5,000, and I think it will be several thousand more."

Gov. Davis—"My re-election is beyond all doubt, and the majority will be larger than believed possible a few weeks ago."

Maine.

Contrary to our expectations, the Republicans have met with a Waterloo defeat in Maine. Money and men were poured into the State and Blaine and the whole Republican party worked night and day to secure a victory. Under these circumstances, it was considered that the opposition would meet with certain defeat. It seems, however, that the people of Maine have had enough of the Republican party, its men and its measures, and they emphasized that feeling at the polls yesterday. The election was for Governor, State Legislature and members of Congress. The Democrats and Greenbackers united upon one ticket and the returns indicate that they have elected their Governor and three out of five Congressmen. The defeat of Reed, by Mr. Anderson, a Democrat, if it has occurred, will be particularly gratifying to the Democrats, as he is one of the most obnoxious of Radicals.

But the great thing of this election is that it settles how Maine will vote in November. There is a joint Electoral ticket of opponents of Garfield on which are three Hancock men and there can scarcely be a doubt now that they will be successful. Both parties have made the fight with the expectation that the one successful would be equally so in November. Maine has been solidly Republican for so many years that it has been virtually left out of Democratic calculations. Hancock can be elected without it, but the loss of it to the Republicans will be fatal to Garfield. Even if later returns should show that the State has elected the Republican Governor, anything less than 5,000 majority for him would be comparatively a Democratic victory as the majority for Hayes in 1876 was 16,286, and in the September election the same year, the Republican majority was 15,459. The light is breaking in the East and it will spread from now until the 1st Tuesday in November illuminates the whole American sky with the brilliancy of a Democratic victory.

Montgomery Advertiser.

Maine.

Our dispatches show the situation in the Pine Tree State. It is better than the most sanguine of our friends had hoped.

The Fusionists have elected a Governor.

They have re-elected Mr. March Greenbacker with Democratic leanings.

They have re-elected Mr. Ladd, Democrat.

They have cut down almost to 0 the majority of Reed, the most rampant stalwart in Maine, next to Blaine.

They have given a boom to the great Democratic tide that will be felt in its mighty swell in every State in the Union save Vermont, Rhode Island and Iowa!

Great as the victory is, it would undoubtedly have been greater still but for the unfortunate meddling of Weaver. Beyond doubt he is the biggest political humbug of the times—not excepting George Francis Train. After parading himself through the South as the prodigious Hercules that was to carry Alabama, Arkansas, Texas and West Virginia, he hurried into Maine. By this time he had swelled out to such vast proportions, that he declined to be escorted by a Democratic torchlight procession, refused to speak on the same platform with a Democrat, and condemned the entire Fusion movement. His whole course in Maine was a movement in favor of the party of bribes and the bloody shirt. But with all his Republican devilment, the combined opposition was gloriously triumphant.

Radicalism is sepulchred.

Montgomery Advertiser 15th inst.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher some time ago received a letter from a young man who recommended himself very highly as honest, and closed with the request, "Get me an easy situation this honesty may be rewarded." To this Mr. Beecher replied: "Don't be an editor, if you would be easy. Do not try the law. Avoid school-keeping. Keep out of the pulpit. Let alone all ships, stores and merchandise. Abhor politics. Keep away from lawyers. Don't practice medicine. Be not a farmer nor a mechanic, neither a soldier or a sailor. Don't study. Don't work. None of them are easy. Oh, my honest friend, you are in a very hard world! I know of but one 'easy' place in it. That is the grave."

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.
The most successful remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects, and does not blister. Read proof below.

From Rev. P. N. GRANGER.
Presiding Elder of the St. Albans District.
St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 20, 1880.
Dr. D. J. Kendall & Co., GENTS:—In reply to your letter, I will say that my experience with 'Kendall's Spavin Cure' has been very satisfactory indeed. Three or four years ago, I procured a bottle of your agent, and with it cured a horse of lameness caused by a spavin. Last season my horse became very lame and I turned him out for a few weeks, when he became better, but when I put him on the road he grew worse, when I discovered that a ring bone was forming. I procured a bottle of 'Kendall's Spavin Cure,' and with less than a bottle cured him so that he is not lame, neither can the bunch be found.

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. M. PARKER.

Perseverance Will Tell.
Stoughton, Mass., March 10th, 1880.
B. J. KENDALL & Co., GENTS:—In justice to you and myself, I think that I ought to let you know that I have removed two bone spavins with 'Kendall's Spavin Cure,' one very large one, don't know how long the spavin had been there. I have owned the horse eight months. It took me four months to take the large one off, and two for the small one. I have used ten bottles. The horse is entirely well, not at all stiff, and no bunch to be seen or felt. This is a wonderful medicine. It is a new thing here, but if it does for all what it has done for me, its sale will be very great.

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. E. PARKER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.
Kelley's Island Erie Co. O. Me. 23 1880.
Dr. B. J. KENDALL & Co., GENTS:—I have used your 'Kendall's Spavin Cure' on a bone spavin, and am pleased to report that it has taken the enlargement completely off. It took only one bottle to perform the cure. I am confident if it is properly used, it will do all you claim for it.

Yours truly,
C. M. LINCOLN.

STATEMENT MADE UNDER OATH.
To Whom It May Concern:—In the year 1875, I treated with Kendall's Spavin Cure, a bone spavin of several months' growth, nearly half as large as a hen's egg and completely stopped the lameness and removed the enlargement. I have worked the horse over since very hard, and he never has been lame, nor could I ever see any difference in the size of the back joints since I treated him with Kendall's spavin Cure.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE
On Human Flesh.
PATTON'S MILLS, WASHINGTON CO. N. Y., Feb. 21, 1878.
B. J. KENDALL, M. D., Dear Sir:—The particular case on which I used your Spavin Cure was a malignant ankle sprain of sixteen months' standing. I had tried many things, but in vain. Your Spavin Cure put the foot to the ground again, and for the first time since hurt, in a natural position. For a curative liniment it excels anything we ever used.

Yours truly,
REV. M. P. BELL,
Pastor M. E. Church, Patton's Mills, N. Y.

Kendall's Spavin Cure is sure in its effects, mild in its action as it does not blister, yet it is penetrating and powerful to reach every deep seated pain, to remove any bony growth or other enlargement such as spavins, splints, curbs, callous, sprains, swellings, any lameness and all enlargements of the joints or limbs, or rheumatism in man and for any purpose for which a liniment is used for man or beast. It is very known to be the best liniment for man ever used, acting mild, and yet certain in its effects.

Send address for Illustrated Circular which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unqualified success to our knowledge, for beast as well as man.

Price, $1 per bottle or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent by any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. DR. B. J. KENDALL & CO.,

WHOLE NO. 2267.

REPUBLICAN DEFI

They worked on in the darkness. At last they came to their ears on the other side of the stone through which they were passing. Other strokes were meeting them. Yet a few minutes more and they were saved.

And his son were the last who were saved up above.

He could never have dared to look upon his son again if I had returned without him. "Foolish," said the brave miner, "I am a fool."

Emperor Napoleon presented him with the Legion of Honor, and he was free admittance to the college.

No Place for a Chinaman.

A road leading from Fairplay to Leadville, Colorado, is a board walk, and because of this the Chinamen are warned not to locate in that district." Despite this warning, the hardy sons of Siam mounted the Fairplay recently, their celestial heads wound tightly about their heads, and their garments which the people wear inside their pants in the breeze, en route for Alma, a climate that broadened their dark hues as one of happy thought. The field of the "first-come-was-here" was large, and they were first in the race. Their untimely arrival from the top of the coach attracted the attention of a passing horseman, who inquired of the driver, "Did they get return tickets?"

The driver smiled and whipped up his horse as he thought of the fun awaiting them at their destination.

The Chinamen were spotted the moment they entered town, and when the coach was immediately surrounded by the white passengers dismounted, and stood on the skirts of the crowd to descend. The Chinamen to their lofty perch of the coach, but the ends of sharp sticks several times stretched up to restrain them from hastily clambering down.

Amid the cries and hoots of the crowd they were taken out and hung them, and were carried forward and finally informed that they were now almost pale with fear, and in place was on top of that coach.

Back, when they were to go down, they did, for the remarks were so tenacious as to admit of no dispute. When the stage wended its way back to Fairplay that night they were and faced Chinamen occupied the same exalted seats as did the white ones in the morning.

For Vice President,

For Congress, Seventh District.

After Hancock's Election: What?

With the election of Hancock in November will pass away one of the chief causes of Democratic solidarity in Alabama as well as other Southern States. The hostile attitude of the Federal Government in the hands of the R. publican party, no longer a standing menace to the South, the chief cohesive element of the Democratic party in the South will be destroyed. We have been made "solid" from an instinct of self-preservation, and our chief concern has been about Federal policies. We have had for years past no State issues worth speaking of. A man running for office in Alabama has not been tried by his opinions on questions of State policy, but rather by his attitude toward either of the great National parties.

With the National Government occupying a friendly attitude toward the South, and the people no longer apprehensive of harm from this source, they will naturally turn their attention more to State affairs; and when this time comes, will come with it a grave responsibility to the leaders of the Democratic party in the South.

Of course the office seekers, the bums, the cheap followers of the Democratic party will see in the election of Hancock new motive for adhesion to the party and a reason for louder professions of loyalty and devotion to the same than ever before; but, the thinking masses of the people, who want or expect no offices at the hands of the Federal Government, will find in his election a fitting opportunity to turn from Federal politics for a season and scrutinize more closely the management of their State Affairs.

In Alabama, for instance, the State Constitution will be closely scanned, and important changes demanded. State Conventions will be put on notice to present to the people none but men of the very highest order for places of honor and trust in the State Government.

Public officials will be held to a more rigid accountability for their acts than heretofore.

Party managers who make up the slates will have to get a little back into the shade and let the people do the voting take a hand.

Our bond question is happily already settled, and that may not come up to disturb party harmony, as has been the case in Virginia and Tennessee.

But other questions, touching changes in the Constitution and otherwise, can come up that may be fruitful of a division of sentiment in the Democratic party, to wit: the exemption question, the labor problem, the tax rate, the convict system, the election laws, which last mentioned, though satisfactory to a large section, are displeasing to the white counties of the State.

Neither one of these, perhaps, or all combined, as well as other questions that could here be mentioned, might not serve as the basis for a new party in the State, founded on State issues; but, either jointly or severally, they are of sufficient consequence to serve as an entering wedge by which the party in Alabama may eventually be divided as is now unhappily the case in Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia.

Moreover, it is a fact that cannot be ignored, that the same character of legislation does not, under the new condition of things, suit all the geographical divisions of our State.

With the necessity for a solid Democratic party removed in Alabama, it is scarcely possible that this in itself will not breed dissension in the party, no less than the rivalry of the sections in pursuit of the offices of the State.

This can only be averted by the broadest statesmanship on the part of the executive and legislative branches of the State Government; by liberal concessions on the part of the sections one to another; and, above all, by such legislation only as righteousness necessity demands—such legislation alone as is dictated by the purest and most exalted patriotism.

The State Convention of Greenbackers of Maine met in Portland the 21st, for the purpose of nominating Presidential electors. Four hundred and sixty-five delegates were present. A resolution was passed to have with the Democrats in the Presidential election. They leave Weaver out of calculation, as a dead duck. However about 75 of the more stalwart Greenbackers met subsequent to the convention and agreed to nominate Weaver and Chambers electors.

The very latest returns from Maine up to Wednesday give Plaiside, the Fusion candidate 174 plurality. At the same election a constitutional amendment was adopted to make a plurality elect, and under this amendment Plaiside will take his seat. The Radicals tried hard to count their men in, but the Democrats and Greenbackers watched them too closely.

Now is a good time to settle with the printer. Now is the very time.

On the 4th of this month, Judge A. R. Manning, one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of Alabama, submitted to a surgical operation in New York, and on the 17th he died in the same city.

Judge Manning was born in Amherst, New Jersey, in 1810, and came to Madison County, Alabama, when a minor. He graduated at the University of Tennessee and read law with Hon. A. T. Hopkins of Huntsville. In 1836 he settled in Marengo County for the practice of his profession. In 1845 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature from Marengo, and in 1847-51 represented Marengo and Wilcox in the Senate. His next move was to Mobile, where he took high rank as a lawyer. In 1872 he represented Mobile in the House. In 1874 he was nominated by the Democratic party of the State for Associate Justice and elected. At the recent election he was again chosen by the people for the Supreme bench.

He was a man very much beloved and esteemed by those who knew him well, and certainly held in very high estimation throughout the State by the legal fraternity. In his death Alabama has sustained a great loss.

The Radicals of this Congressional District met in Gadsden Tuesday and nominated Arthur Bingham, of Talladega for Congress, and Nish McKeefe for Garfield elector for the District.

The death of Judge A. R. Manning devolves on Gov. Cobb the appointment of his successor. We hope the Governor will appoint Judge Jno. T. Heflin to the place. Judge Heflin possesses in an eminent degree every qualification, and moreover it was evident in the late State Convention that he was the choice of a very large number of the delegates to the Convention for even a more exalted position on our Supreme Bench. His appointment would give general satisfaction to this section of the State.

THE TRIUMPH IN MAINE.

Comments on the Result—Hancock's Election Practically Concealed.

It was the revolution in 1840 that started the Harrison heresies; it was the more than 18,000 Republican majority of Maine in September, 1860, that cast the doubtful October States of Indiana and Pennsylvania into the Lincoln scale and revolutionized the National administration; it was the more than 17,000 majority of Maine in September, 1872, that turned back the Greely tide and postponed sectional peace indefinitely. It was the more than 12,000 majority in September, 1876, that saved New Hampshire, Ohio, Wisconsin, California, Oregon and Nevada to Hayes, and made his formally declared election possible by an Electoral Commission, after his defeat by a quarter of a million majority; and the loss of the entire Republican majority of Maine, hitherto more than ten per cent. of the whole vote polled, will cast every doubtful State in the Union into column, and make States doubtful which have been practically conceded to Garfield.

It is not a victory that can be welcomed by any with unmingled pride, but it is a defeat that adds disgrace to disaster; and is a Garfield Waterloo.—Philadelphia Times, Ind.

The returns from Maine will infuse life and hope into the Democratic cause, which has heretofore been heavy and sluggish. Rich Democrats will now contribute more freely for election expenses in the persuasion that the money will not be wasted. The party will entertain no doubt of its ability to carry Indiana, and may perhaps prosecute a vigorous campaign in Ohio. The Republicans would not be quite free from apprehensions respecting that State, after losing so nearly Maine. The majority for Hayes in Ohio was less than three thousand, and the Democrats need not give up the State in despair after gaining a New England State which they did not expect to carry. At any rate enough can be done in Ohio to prevent a full concentration of Republican efforts on Indiana, and thereby facilitate a Democratic victory in this important State with Indiana secured, and Ohio rendered doubtful, the supporters of Hancock may reasonably expect to carry New York, New Jersey and Connecticut and to have more electoral votes than they need.—New York Herald, Ind.

It is not too early to draw an excellent moral. The Republican party has been enjoying its victories in advance. Work and no confidence, with elections. If this disappointment should excite the party to greater exertions, it will be a piece of good fortune. The sober sentiment of the country is with the Republican party, but that sentiment must be aroused to a sense of the dangers which would lie in a victory of a party of fraud, repudiation and disloyalty.—Cincinnati Enquirer, Dem.

The November victory is ours, but we must take care of our own. The exertions of the Republican managers will be rebuffed. But they will be in vain against the will of the people whose temper and convictions are now known.—Cincinnati Enquirer, Dem.

With this reverse in Maine confronting them Republicans will renew the fight along the whole line with redoubled energy. It means a stubborn battle. It means hard work. It means that the business men of the land must wake up to the risk of Democratic success, with all its uncertainties and dangers. We believe that they will, and that from now on the great patriotic hosts will make a splendid fight. They have been awakened from their sense of security to a sense of peril.—Cincinnati Commercial, Rep.

It would be idle to deny that the news brings disappointment to the hopes and expectations of the Republicans, but it would be futile to accept the result as a cause for despondency. It argues that there is still hope, as that State is not lost to the Republicans; but if it is, they must take a lesson from it and continue the canvass with unflinching zeal.—Chicago Inter Ocean, Rep.

The election in Maine decides nothing. The election in Indiana will decide everything. Mr. Blaine had been telling persons outside all the while as earnestly as he could, without stirring party; that there was danger in Maine, but the Republicans in other States have not realized it, and supplies of material aid have been stunted.—Cincinnati Commercial, Rep.

The Democrats will claim this as a victory, and it is. But measured by figures it is not a formidable one, nor such as cannot be overcome in November, when the Greenbackers will be in the field with their own electoral ticket.—Cincinnati Gazette, Rep.

Whatever the cause, the predictions have generally mislead the Republican press, and what must be conceded to be a substantial failure in Maine will be more depressing because it is unexpected.—New York Times, Rep.

In this event it is a serious reverse for the Republicans, and a sobering one. Especially so as the canvass was organized and conducted on the Republican side by James G. Blaine.—New York Sun, Dem.

Vermont may want to change her vote now. As for Iowa, it is in doubt.—Chicago News, Rep.

The prospect for a Fair here this Fall has about "played out." However, sufficient enterprise is being developed to get one up by the middle of November, we will give notice of it through the Republican in due time.

It is said that the ladies of the B. Church will open a lunch room in the room under the Republican office during Court week, for the purpose of raising funds for the church building. Parties may lunch with them may be served of good cookery, plenty of variety of provision, polite and reasonable prices.

There has been a small war in Ohio between striking miners and the militia. About 500 miners well armed, assaulted the Bowling Guards, near Corning, and rapid volleys of musketry from both sides were kept up for five minutes. The miners finally broke ranks and fled, leaving the military victors of the field. The dispatch of Monday does not state how many were killed. The difficulty grew out of a refusal of white miners to work with negro miners.

The New Bible. WEAVER'S STATION ALA., Sept. 21, 1880. Mr. L. W. Grant.

I see from your paper that some person has found a great many faults and mistakes in the new version of the Bible. I have one and have not yet found mistake in it. The gentleman will look on page 518—subject, Christ's treatment of the erring—from the 3rd to the 11th verse of 8th chapter of John, he will find the whole narrative of the woman taken in adultery; and I think I can find a great many more verses that he thinks is left out of the Book.

NOTE.—The Bible that our correspondent speaks of is not probably the one to which reference was made in the Republican last week. The Bible to which we made reference, is a new version, by a commission of learned men of Protestant church, and has just been issued from the London press. The Bible to which our correspondent refers, is probably HITCHCOCK'S Analysis of the Bible, arranged according to subjects.

A Card of Thanks. The delegates of the Snow Creek Baptist Association (colored) tender their heartfelt thanks to the citizens of Jacksonville for the hospitalities shown them during their recent Association. They especially tender thanks to the white Baptists of Jacksonville for the use of their church.

R. S. LIDDLE, Clerk of Association. LETTER FROM N. C. NEWBERNE, N. C. Sept. 13, 1880. ED. REPUBLICAN.

If my memory serves me aright I promised before leaving home to give you a few items from the old "Far West" state. My first stop was made in Morganton Burke County, among the mountains, woodshiners and the most hospitable people the world affords. Morganton as you will remember is not far from the homes of the Forney's, Hoke's, Alenahy's, the Adenholds and others of Calhoun. I met a Mr. Dan'l Forney living six miles north of Morganton, a cousin of Gen. Henry and Gen. John Forney. I also met a Capt. Henderson who for several years made Ala. his home, and says that he would by far, rather die an Alabamian than to live a North Carolinian. Morganton is a very old town presenting the appearance of a people who care little for the spirit of progress and improvement, though she has elegant churches and a refined society. From Morganton we went East on Western North Carolina R. R. to a thriving little town called Hickory. Here the tobacco business has grown to be a considerable thing. Messrs Hall and Daniels are running five large factories, the sixth, a very large brick building is now in course of construction. While going over the establishments in company with Mr. Daniels he told me that on that day they had received a very large order from Berrys and Co. Rome, Ga.

From Hickory we went to Salisbury, an old town, presenting the appearance of a people who have amassed great wealth and who still enjoy it. Here is the home and birth place of Miss Fannie Fisher, the renowned authoress of North Carolina, she writes under the 'nom de plume' of 'Christina Road.' I had the pleasure of meeting her brother, a young lawyer of great promise, and a most social guest. From Salisbury we took the train for Greensboro, and Danville Road to Greensboro, the best shaded city I've found in the State. Here we remained some twenty days, trading and looking over the city and county. Arnold's celebrated patent grave cover takes well everywhere we go.

Near this place was fought the famous battle of Guilford Court House. I saw a portion of the Union Guards, behind which stood the Home Guards, and from which they were driven, when Light Horse Harry Lee made his memorable charge on the Tories.

There to this day stands old trees marked and scarred from the shots of the cannon. In company with Prof. Arnfield, I dined from an old table upon which Gen. Green and his staff dined. There yet stands upon the battle ground an old stands upon the battle ground an old house with cannon ball holes through its gables, and they say blood could not see them.) I tried to find some mementos of the battle but failed. While in Greensboro both the Democrats and Republicans held county conventions—both were largely attended and both talked hopefully, though from appearances there is little hope for the Republican coming.

The colored people, every one are Republicans or nearly. I found only one who openly declares himself a Democrat and that one a barber in Salisbury by name of Toby. So Mr. Editor if you go there, be sure to have Toby shave you. After leaving Greensboro I passed over a great many very interesting towns and cities, which I shall visit on my return trip. We spent one week at Georgetown a Sea Coast town in the Harbor of Beaufort, in sight of Fort Macon. There I found many curious things to a "Land Lubber," and some of the best and greatest variety of fish it has ever been my good fortune to enjoy. Should you or any of your readers think of spending a pleasant summer, go to Beaufort—Stop at the Sea Side House, kept by Mr. Lorenberg, a most elegant gentleman, and very interesting family. You can step from the shore on a sail boat, take your fish sailing, come back and have the best of dinners with all the entertainment that two accomplished young ladies can afford you.

I can give you some more from Goldsboro where we will go in the morning, and remain some three weeks. E. D. Mc.

Save your cotton and look out for the big advertisement from Anniston next week.

OXFORD ITEMS. Oxford, Ala., Sept. 28.

Cotton today 9 to 10¢. The crop of sweet potatoes will be large.

Apples are plentiful on our streets at 50 cents per bushel. Mr. W. J. Anders has been re-elected Marshal. He slings a lively club.

Mr. Newton Cunningham, two miles south of here, has a severe case of typhoid fever.

Mrs. Harrison, wife of John Harrison, died near this place last Monday night.

The Methodists commenced their revival meeting last Monday morning.

Flint Allen, a young book-keeper or with strong Nimrod propensities, has commenced to grease his mouth with "possum-sop, and wipe it off with "taters."

Messrs Al Kirksey and R. G. Roberts, (Sr.) leave to day, to spend a few months in Texas.

Mrs. Dr. Alexander, of Texas, is now visiting Mrs. J. G. Hudson, (her niece) three miles east of this place.

Mr. Alfred M. Morgan, of the vicinity of White Plains, is preparing to return to this place, after an absence of several years.

A prominent grocery house that failed in New York last Saturday was indebted to a mercantile firm here, to the amount of several hundred dollars.

The Baptist meeting closed last Sunday night, with eight accessions by immersion. In addition to this, one brother, Mr. Parmlee, was re-united. He had been an Episcopalian for a good many years.

Cotton has been grabbing at the coat-tails of 11 cents for a week. Some has been sold in this market for a little more than that amount.

The earthquake that the people of Oxford thought they heard the other night turned out to be a report from Lon Higginbotham's pistol. Two dead chickens and a frightened owl was the result of Lon's effort at moonlight marksmanship.

The merchants and the railroad agent have compromised on the weighing of cotton, at 20 cents per bale. Your correspondent meant no reflection upon Mr. Ragon, the agent, when in a recent article, he reported the action of the merchants relation to the weighing of cotton. In opposing any advance in the price the merchants were simply actuated by the general interests of the town. In no other spirit would they make war upon one whom they have always esteemed as an efficient and accommodating officer.

MARRIED. At the residence of the bride's father, Sept. 16, by Rev. John Scott, Mr. Sam'l Adholt and Mrs. Ophelia Thompson.

At Munford, Sept. 16, Mr. Omor Taylor and Miss Margaret McClurg, both of Talladega county. CITIZEN.

OXFORD ITEMS. Oxford, Ala., Sept. 19 1880.

The farmers are now bringing in cotton and old Oxford seems once more alive to business, from the way our young clerks are running around bare headed over the streets.

R. P. Jones is getting along remarkably well. We hope to see him on our streets among us soon.

Mr. Lon Higginbotham's new building is going up rapidly and looks fine. We look forward to the day that we can welcome him and his fair lady to their new home.

John Ingram has again sent on for another car load of new wagons.

We are glad to see Prof. Dodson again with us. He has been quite ill for some time.

Capt. M. H. Fowler comes to the front with his new buggies and defies competition as he has in his employ one of the finest artists in coach painting that can be found in the State.

Mr. McKibbin has his new store completed.

Mr. Willie Graham is attending school in Oxford. We wish the young man success in all his undertakings.

The boys enjoy many good falls from "C. A. Arnold's" two wheel horse. Go it boys, you will learn after awhile.

Protracted meeting at the Methodist church this week. We hope all will attend.

SUBSCRIBER. There was not much doubt in the minds of the mob at Clinton, Dekato, that Ben Day ought to be hanged. He had committed the capital crime of stealing a horse; but he urged persistently that he only meant to borrow the beast, and finally said: "If I was guilty I'd want to be hanged, and any how, 'tisn't worth while to make much fuss about it. Just toss up a dime and if it goes agin me then I won't say a word; but if I win you're to let me go." The proposition was accepted, and Day won.

KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT. Don't talk too much. Learn how to be silent. There is nothing like the man or woman that can keep the mouth shut. Not that people should always keep the tongue still—it is made for use—but there are times when silence is the best and most effective reply. When a boor speaks roughly or uncivilly to you; when you are asked an impertinent question; when a sneer is conveyed under cover or an inquiry for information, or when, having appealed to you on a question of taste, your opinion is met with ridicule—the best answer in these or like exigencies is masterful silence. Silence bespeaks reserve power, conscious strength dignity, self-command, and nothing is at times so effective as the silence which springs from contempt. He who can endure reproach silently, or keep silent under trying circumstances, is a man of no common character.

Bonn was drunk when he undertook an ascension on a tight rope at Clyde, Ohio, to the tower of the Town Hall. The multitude shouted to him to go back, but he kept straight ahead, staggering at every step. At length he dropped his balance pole and fell backward but like a flash he wrapped his leg around the rope, and field on. He said afterward that the loss of the pole sobered him instantly.

Garfield, in a speech the other day in New York, went out of his way to utter some extreme laudations of Alexander Hamilton. The party, if elected, will resuscitate the half monarchial theories of that eminent man.
